About the Author

Joanne R. Denworth, president of 10,000 Friends of Pennsylvania, is an attorney with experience in environmental, land use, and municipal law. Her varied background includes serving as a township solicitor, working on behalf of housing and community development projects, serving on the Environmental Hearing Board of Pennsylvania, and teaching environmental law at the Graduate School of Urban and Regional Planning of the University of Pennsylvania. She was president of the Pennsylvania Environmental Council from 1986 to 1998 before founding 10,000 Friends, an alliance of organizations and individuals committed to improved land use policies and decisions in Pennsylvania. As co-author and editor of Guiding Growth, a planning and growth management handbook for Pennsylvania municipalities (Pennsylvania Environmental Council, Third Edition, 1993), and author of numerous articles on land use and the environment, she has looked extensively at municipal land use issues. A member of the 21st Century Commission’s Land Use Team, she has since served on the Sound Land Use Advisory Committee to the Governor’s Center for Local Government Services, DCED. She is a graduate of Vassar College and the University of Pennsylvania Law School.
